synopsis

BACKGROUND

The story takes place during an historic turning point of the 13th century and tells of the expansion of the Mongol Empire into Europe. The fundamental question is: Why did the unstoppable Mongolian Army, having travelled thus far into Europe, suddenly turn back from the Castle of Esztergom?

Historians have so far treated it as a fact, that the reason for the retreat may have been the death of the Great Khan Ögödei, leader of the Mongol Empire. However, this theory has been questioned, pointing out that the retreat only affected the Carpathian Basin and today's Central Europe. Using this historical uncertainty, the film script is completed with fictitious elements, providing an exciting, mystical, and surprising explanation of what could have happened.

THE ACTION TAKES PLACE IN FEBRUARY 1242 IN THE KINGDOM OF HUNGARY AT THE CASTLE OF
ESZTERGOM AT THE FOOT OF THE PILIS MOUNTAINS.

Khan Batu, grandson of the world-conquering Genghis Khan, and Chief of the Mongolian Army, is on the verge of a never-to-return opportunity and - by conquering Europe - his achievement would then be recorded in the written history of the Mongol Empire, making him 'worthy of the inheritance of the mighty Genghis Khan' while fulfilling Genghis Khan's final order: „Reach the eternal sea!”

Khan Batu, who had come to a halt due to the sudden and mysterious disappearance of King Béla of Hungary, unites the Mongolian army and its allies under the Castle of Esztergom, which he is trying to take forcefully, by siege - but also by deception through collusion with the Papal Legate, Cesareani.

When news arrives that Ögödei, the great Khan of the Mongol Empire, has died, it disrupts the war mechanism that had worked perfectly until then. To everyone's surprise, Khan Batu gives orders for the celebration of the Lunar New Year – probably to counter the sad and potentially dispiriting news for his Soldiers of the death of the reigning Khan. He then offers a two-night truce for the Defenders of Esztergom and invites them to the feast.

ELABORATES AND REFLECTS ON THE EVENTS OF THOSE 48 HOURS

Eusebius, the Canon of Esztergom, who speaks excellent Mongolian, has a great career ahead of him in the Church, but he also maintains a good relationship with the enigmatic Hermits of the nearby Pilis Mountains. The arrival of Papal Legate Cesareani in Esztergom Castle surprises Eusebius, just as it surprises everyone else.

The two main characters in the film are Khan Batu, leader of the conquering Mongolian army and, on the opposing side, Eusebius, Canon of Esztergom. These two men represent two very different worlds which appear to have no common ground or meeting points. Eusebius encounters Khan Batu face to face as one of the delegates sent from the castle to the Lunar New Year feast. There is no question that, as a worshipper of the Christian religion, he can only carry out his duties with a pure heart. His way, as a divine trial, is lined with challenges and tragedies.

Khan Batu is opposed by his Warlords, who are fighting for the vacant throne and decide amongst themselves that the final order from Genghis can only be achieved by conquest. They inevitably become Khan Batu's 'enemies from within'.

During the two-man Hungarian delegation's visit to the Mongolian camp, the mission of Canon Eusebius is negated by his companion, the valiant archer, Bacsó, when the latter attempts to assassinate Khan Batu. The Khan survives the assassination due to the intervention of Eusebius. Khan Batu's only true confidante is Ulen, who in the eyes of others is merely his mistress, but behind the scenes is Khan Batu's insightful, wise counsel and skilled bodyguard.

Due to their mutual respect, Eusebius's goals are aided by Negin, the Shaman of the Mongol army, and the Canon finally succeeds with his secret mission: he leads Khan Batu to the Pilis Mountains, where Béla, King of the Hungarians, awaits him. During their negotiations, positions are debated, and relationships strained. Finally, common roots, along with a flag made from a white yak tail, which Temüjin (Genghis Khan) had previously given to Hungarian opponents as a symbol of friendship, reinterpret the command of the great Genghis: the eternal sea is not meant to be a physical place (the Atlantic Ocean), but is a figurative depiction of Peace!

Despite Khan Batu's orders, in his short absence in the Pilis Mountains the Mongolian Warlords call the army to arms and begin a final attack on the castle. The castle gates to the last Hungarian stronghold are opened by Cesareani, the duplicitous and dissembling Papal Legate. Khan Batu arrives just in time. He crushes the rebellion, retaliates, and reclaims power over the army.

The story ends with the departure of the Mongol army from the Kingdom of Hungary and the liberation of the Castle of Esztergom. The future fate of our heroes is known from the history books: Khan Batu returns home and unites his Mongolian provinces to establish the 'Golden Horde' and remains the guardian of his country for the rest of his life.

Eusebius bids farewell to his church career, unites with the Pilis hermits and founds a new religious community. The Order of St. Paul exists to this day. The Order of Saint Paul the First Hermit, commonly called the Pauline Fathers, is a monastic order of the Roman Catholic Church, founded in Hungary during the 13th century.
